In the long history of human existence, the idea of self-reliance has never been a new concept. Economists define self-sufficiency or self-reliance as the state of not requiring any aid, support, interaction or trade with the outside world. It means a national economy that seeks to use its natural and human capital to the maximum to generate growth and employment and, vitally, develop an economic and financial structure that is not excessively dependent on the outside world for markets, supplies and investments. In the present scenario, "Self-Reliance is the ability of a country to maintain its domestic supply chain along with satisfying the global demand. It is that state in which a country achieves more inclusive growth with human welfare at its heart". The digital economy is largely considered as pro-environment or green sector and the concept of digital transformation has gained immense prominence in today's rapidly evolving global landscape. In India, a nation striving for economic growth and sustainability, digital transformation presents a compelling pathway towards achieving self-reliance. Digital transformation begins with the development of a robust digital infrastructure that encompasses reliable high-speed internet connectivity, advanced data centres, and cloud services. Such infrastructure is essential for enabling seamless access to digital technologies across the country, thereby fostering innovation and competitiveness in both urban and rural areas. In the context of India, a nation striving for self-reliance and economic prosperity, the adoption and integration of digital technologies play a crucial role in accelerating progress.

The present chapter explores the transformative potential of digital technologies in promoting economic prosperity while ensuring environmental sustainability, thus laying the foundation for India's journey towards self-reliance. This is descriptive research which helps to understand about the Digital transformation in India and its effects so far on economic growth and sustainability. The type of data used is secondary data obtained from sources such as research papers, newspaper, journals and magazine articles, media reports, government official sites, etc.

Introduction

Digital transformation for self-reliance in India refers to leveraging digital technologies and initiatives to promote economic growth, reduce dependency on foreign goods and services, empower local industries and businesses, and enhance the overall socio-economic development of the country. The goal is to make India more self-sufficient and less reliant on external resources, technology, and expertise. It was in 1986, India went online for the first time. Back then, the Internet was only meant for the use of educational, research communities and defence purposes. During 1995, the VSNL opened the internet access to public by using modem. Now the game has changed most of the Indians have mobile phones which have internet access. In 2017, India had 331.77 million internet users and the figure is expected to grow 511.89 million internet users by 2022. Without considering the untapped potential, India is the second-largest online market worldwide after China. (STATISTICS PORTAL, n.d.). The internet usage has increased because of decline in the smartphone prices over the past couple of years and the fall in Internet data prices, which was certainly spurred by the arrival of Reliance Jio in 2016. There were 692.0 million internet users in India at the start of 2023, when internet penetration stood at 48.7 percent. India was home to 467.0 million social media users in January 2023, equating to 32.8 percent of the total population. A total of 1.10 billion cellular mobile connections were active in India in early 2023, with this figure equivalent to 77.0 percent of the total population (Digital India Report 2023). Despite being a software powerhouse, India's inhabitants had relatively limited access to electronic government services. The Demonetization efforts made recently expedited the use of digital payment methods in financial transactions at a faster tempo in comparison to other nations. After the paradigm shift, people have opened bank accounts, and more people using banking services. E-governance and digital services have emerged as key components in the quest for self-reliance. Digitizing government services and reducing bureaucratic hurdles through e-governance initiatives can enhance the efficiency and transparency of public service delivery. By streamlining administrative processes, India can create a business-friendly environment that fosters entrepreneurship and investment, thereby boosting economic growth. Manufacturing, a critical sector for self-reliance, can benefit significantly from the adoption of digital technologies. Industry 4.0 technologies, such as automation, robotics, and IoT, can enhance productivity, efficiency, and quality in manufacturing processes. The integration of digital solutions into the manufacturing sector can reduce import dependency, stimulate local production, and create employment opportunities.

Agriculture, being the backbone of India's economy, can leverage digital transformation to achieve higher productivity and reduce post-harvest losses. Digital agricultural solutions, including precision farming, smart irrigation, and farm management software, can empower farmers with data-driven insights and best practices, leading to sustainable agricultural practices and increased self-reliance in the food sector. The integration of digital technologies in manufacturing and agriculture will bolster self-reliance, while digital health initiatives will improve healthcare access for all. Embracing digital transformation with a focus on cybersecurity and data protection will pave the way for India's self-reliance journey in the digital age.

Historical Perspective of Self-Reliance

The term Self-Reliance which is becoming buzz these days is not a new term for Indian economy. The principle of self-reliance was initially stated by the M.K. Gandhi. Gandhian plan was based on the idea of self-reliance. PM Modi started Make in India program to encourage self-reliance in India but its seeds were sown several decades ago by the Father of the Nation Mahatma Gandhi. He had promoted the use of
