INTRODUCTION:

Kamalini Vocational Training Centre, Alipur, Haryana, India

Kamalini is a vocational training project of the registered society, Educational and Development Initiatives (EDI) to help needy women gain livelihood skills for a thriving future for their families. Over the years, the Kamalini project has reached to more than 3000 women in urban villages and in rural areas near Sohna for basic literacy, garment sewing, basic beautician training and computers. Some of the courses have led to external certification by the NIIT Foundation, and the centre has been recognized with ISO certification for quality in vocational training. After training, students contribute to their family income through taking up formal employment in boutiques, home-based ventures or joined to make products to sell through a production unit. Other courses offered include

Basic English and soft skills, cooking and housekeeping, digital literacy for employability and entrepreneurship. In addition, staff and volunteers run various outreach training and service initiatives to respond to the needs of the Kamalini students and their communities.

Vision: Women are the key to a thriving future for their family and community.

Mission: To empower underprivileged women to attain holistic development through encouragement, basic education and vocational skills.
